Course Overview

In many areas, police departments have begun using Social Media to aid in investigations into suspected drug dealers. Any case involving possible drug use can mean searching for photographs and posts across platforms that would indicate potential and support drug use.

These types of investigations include searching and setting up alerts for specific terms relating to drug use. In some casees, a sting can be set up to see if the individual is dealing drugs or affiliated with a dealer.

This course will train officers to investigate illegal activity conducted on the internet through the use of social media such as Facebook, MySpace, Craigslist, Backpage and more.

This two day course consists of techniques to train officers to gather information and valuable intelligence on gang members and drug suspects through the internet.
